OLD BOREAS FACTOR IN GAME

Local Tribesmen Put Up an Errorless Exhibition—First of Its Kind This Season—Ely and Deleahanty Find Ball With Effect.

Back to the tall timbers; back, ye even many miles toward the rear of the forest primeval; back, Senators, farther than is required to assume a sitting posture. The Senators are not for you. Your daily in the National Capital has been disastrous. Three games have gone to the bad; but, even then, rejoice, Captain James, rejoice. It might have been four.

Out of the north last Wednesday came an aggregation of ballplayers, strong, quick-witted disciples of the national game. They had deposed the great, far-famed Orioles; they were going to do likewise with the lesser-famed Senators. Yesterday afternoon the third game of the series went to the bad in one of the most glorious swatting carnivals ever held in this ballfield.

Senators Hit the Ball.

From the jump the Senators began to do things to the leather. Close upon their heels followed Collins' game, and although the visitors touched up Col. Wyatt Lee even more plentifully than the Senators punished Mr. Dineen & Co., still the ones that count the most continued to pour across the plate in a steady stream for the local bunch.

Early in the game "Wild Bill" Dineen, seeking revenge for the drubbing that was administered to him last Wednesday, appeared upon the scene. His bad angel, however, was in the ascendant, and after one heart-breaking inning, in which Loftus' tribe accumulated four runs, he retired in favor of one Dineen, hulked far and wide as the end of the year.

It would not be for the Senators to dispute the claim that he is the "find of the year." They found him early and often—in fact, they found him for a total of twenty-six times, including three home runs. Manager Tom Loftus has even volunteered to go forth and search for another "find" for Jimmy Collins. There are several more games with Boston before the end of the season, and the local management would not like to see the Beaneville contingent run short of this variety.

Lee Touched Up.

Before the game Colonel Lee held a heart to heart talk with a bosom friend. He whispered that Collins' team was just about his size, and it was his private opinion that they would not feel much better than the proverbial 29 cents along about 6 o'clock. Although the Boston people were not personally consulted upon the subject, the Marcent of the baseball world registered the valuation of the Beaneville crowd at twenty-nine per, or $23.9 for the lot.

The small-sized cyclone that tore across the northeast section of the city yesterday nearly placed the Senators to the bad. Old Boreas had heard that there was a deal of chugging on the tups, and he is not the one to miss sport of any description. Down he swept from his place in the clouds, and not content with being a modest spectator, took a hand in the game himself.

He grabbed the high ones and swirled them many yards from their original destinations. He picked out the left field fence as a good thing, and at every opportunity attempted to give the horseshoe a ducking in the pond on the other side. This unexpected interference accounts in a measure for the large number of long hits made by both teams.

Remarkable Game.

In more than one sense the game was a remarkable one. Lee was hit safely twelve times for a total of thirty-one bases, yet Boston accumulated but seven tallies. Dineen and Dineen were jointly punished fifteen separate times, for a total of twenty-nine bases, and the Senators scored fifteen times.

Few indeed are the instances in the past where Washington has won a game of this nature. The pinch hitting was left, as a general rule, to the other side. The new Senators, however, have strong claim to the distinction of being rated as sluggers of the first water, and the occupants of the sun seats yesterday cheered themselves hoarse as one long, hit succeeded another.

In the fifth inning, after the locals had taken a temporary slump for two innings, the most exciting incident of the day occurred. Lee had just cleared the bases with a three-bagger and "Horsehoe" Ryan had drawn his usual free transportation, when Keister lifted the leather over the left center field fence for one of the longest home runs ever made on the home grounds.

Keister Makes a Hit.

As the stocky little outfielder came trotting down the third base line he was greeted with salvo upon salvo of applause from thousands of clapping hands. The real feelings of a majority of the blanchettes was expressed by the actions of a very ragged negro, who climbed over the fence into right field and lay rolling around in the dust for several minutes.

When the latter passed over the home plate, he rubbed the kinky head for luck and the next time he came to bat he repeated the home-run stunt and once more sent the crowd into convulsions. There was also a duplication of the inaugural day flower episode. When Lee took his first turn at bat he was presented with a large bouquet of roses. He responded with a single, and before the game was over duplicated this stunt, besides pulling off a three-bagger.

The manner in which the runs were secured makes an interesting story, and the game was by no means as one-sided as the score appears. In the first inning the visitors went to the field in short order, but it took a triple to take care of the local bunch. Ryan began the difficulty by hammering one to left field, which Hickman conveniently dropped, sending Jimmy to second.

Ex-Oriole Again.

Billy Keister then donated a long single that scored Ryan and he went to second on Wolcott's sacrifice. Deleahanty then bumped into the ball for a two-bagger and Keister was to the good. Coughlin found a high one to the left territory and Hickman again failed to come to time and Del went to second.

While Carey was attempting to find one to his liking and rip the cover off, Del and Coughlin were dancing impatiently around on the third and second cushions, respectively. After he had pitched a couple of balls, Dineen took pity on the nerves of the two Senators and placed one where Greiner could not reach it. Two more scores.

The Bostoners were not heard from in the second, but the gift of the initial sac to Drill followed by Lee's safety and Ryan's two-bagger, gave the Senators two more. Jimmy attempted to stretch his hit into a three, but failed to make good at the last sack.

Visitors Hit It Out.

After this little spurt, the Senators laid down while the visitors accumulated four runs in the next three innings. Hickman opened the ball by lining the leather over the left field fence. Big Lachance immediately got jealous, and to show that there were others, placed the horseshoe in almost the same locality. The next three men were one, two, three.

It was not until two men had taken a large mouthful of dust in the fifth that there was anything doing. At this interesting point, when Colonel Lee was about to congratulate himself upon being out of the woods, that James Collins set his wards a good example by bumping the ball for three sacks. Freeman followed with a double and Hickman with a triple. Lachance put an end to the agony by succumbing from Ely to Carey.

When the visitors had been put to sleep in the sixth, which, by the way, is becoming Washington's lucky inning. Ely followed Carey's out with a long, safe drive. Drill took his in the ribs and walked. It was then up to Lee to increase the dangerously small lead that remained to the local bunch, and he came to time with a triple that landed both Ely and Drill to the good.

Timely Hitting.

Ryan then did his famous waiting stunt and won out. It was now up to Keister to do things, and he did, sending everybody home. The next two men were easy money for Boston, but there were no tears shed, as the original lead had been regained with one run additional as interest.

In the seventh the Beanevilles again laced the leather around the country for three-baggers and things and secured two more runs, but a base on balls that gave Carey the first sack was the prime mover in allowing the Senators to make good one of the runs, as "Scoops" was enabled to tally on Dineen's error.

Ferris' three-bagger, followed by Parent's long fly to Keister, gave Beaneville one more in the eighth, but after Keister had opened things up with a home run over the fence, the Senators took another brace, and did things to the ball that gave them three more tallies. Deleahanty swiped the leather around the country for three-baggers and things and secured two more runs, but a base on balls that gave Carey the first sack was the prime mover in allowing the Senators to make good one of the runs, as "Scoops" was enabled to tally on Dineen's error.

NEW TWIRLING WONDER.

St. Louis Again Succumbs to Cleveland, Sustaining Another Shutout.

(Special to The Washington Times.)

ST. LOUIS, April 26.—The home team suffered another defeat at the hands of the Spiders this afternoon. To add to the woes of the Mount City rooters it was another shut-out, the second in succession. Jess pitched for the Ohio representatives and proved a veritable stumbling block to the Missouri entry in the championship race. Burkett was the one man to find him, and he only for a single. But twenty-seven men in all faced the new twirling wonder. The score:

ORIOLES WIN AGAIN.

McGraw's Birds Seemed to Have Rounded Into Proper Form.

(Special to The Washington Times.)

BALTIMORE, April 26.—The Orioles, trained to the minute for a bruising battle, went to the Athletics from the very start today, and by magnificent all-around play administered a second defeat to the team at whose head is the mighty Lajole. The Philadelphia sluggers were unable to do anything at all with "Arry" Owell. He was in fine form and disposed of one hitter after another. But four hits in all were chalked up against him. Duglesby pitched for the visitors and also did well.

Over 3,000 people saw the game. They cheered and rooted for the Birds to win in the lusty fashion that has made the local rooters famous. The score:

COLUMBIAN BLANKETED BY GEORGETOWN TEAM

Lawyers No Match for the Blue and Gray.

West End Collegians Give an Object Lesson in Wielding the Willow—Score 20 to 0.

Nine lads wearing the word "Columbian" upon their shirt fronts, trudged over to Georgetown Field yesterday afternoon to attempt to take a fall out of the West End collegians. At the conclusion of the ninth inning they were no nearer scoring a run on the Georgetown lads than they were before they went to the field. Georgetown easily administered a good drubbing to the tune of 20 to 0.

The score might have been larger, but the boys from across the creek were completely fagged out, and were thoroughly disgusted with the showing of their opponents. They beat deep paths from base to base, particularly the one leading from third base to the home plate.

Columbian Hits Scarce.

Runs and even hits were as scarce as hens' teeth in the Columbian youths' headquarters. The former could not be gotten by any means, and the latter were at a premium. Never during the progress of the nine sessions at the bat did the dejected team have a ghost of a chance.

Only in one inning did the Columbian boys get a man as far as the third corner from over the hill, and he bowled them down and out in approved style. He was supported in the best possible way, as everyone played an errorless game.

Runkle Touched Up.

Runkle, a semi-professional player, who hails from the Census Office, was appointed to shoot the ball over for the wearers of the blue and orange. He was touched up for some twenty or more hits, and this, coupled with his miserable support, lost the game for his team. Although he is a good pitcher, Georgetown boys are excellent hitters, and as long as they had decent batting habiliments yesterday it made little or no difference who was to do the pitching. He gave only two hits, and he was out of the game in the fourth inning. It appeared to an uninterested observer that each of the Columbian players was trying to outdo his team mates in making stupid plays, and to see O'Loughlin scowl at the edge of the embankment when other players needed it to prevent a man from scoring.

Game in Detail.

Thinking that the last swat at the spheroid would give them a chance to even up matters if they happened to fall behind during the first part of the game, the lawyers took first turn in the tall grass. Georgetown made a good beginning. Dowling rapped the first one thrown in over to Bielaski at third base, and was thrown out at first. A fly to center by Dorman made two out. Morgan sauntered up next and laid his avoirdupois against a whizzing out to right field. It rolled over the bank, but was returned to the field in time to prevent the blonde young man from disturbing the sand around the home plate. Morgan put the ball in the same identical spot, and hustled around to the third sack himself. Drake hit to left field, and scored when O'Loughlin scowled a hot fly to Adams at first, and retired the side.

The West End lads made three impressions on the score card during the action of this inning. They made two more in the following inning, but were blanked in the third. Long distance swatting was in order in the fourth inning, while errors were in order on Columbian's side.

In Bunches of Five.

When the last man was retired Georgetown had five tallies to show for its efforts. One, two, three was the order of things in the fifth, but two men wearing Georgetown uniforms sailed across the finishing line in the sixth inning. Two men scored on errors in the seventh, and one man scored when O'Hara put the leather to center field, and the ball rolled to the edge of the embankment. Three tallies in the eighth, and a great one. The final inning was a great one. The hits to the extreme ends of the field, and as many errors and stupid plays, on Columbian's part gave the followers of the Blue and Gray standard five more runs, making a grand total of 20. The score:
